

Firm offers alternative to having FD

A NEW organisation is making waves by offering small businesses professional financial advice without the need for a full-time financial director.

FinanceHeads, which is currently based in Upper Basildon, claims to fill the gap between bookkeeper and high street accountant, offering part-time support for all small and medium sized businesses' (SMEs) financial needs.

Their services include analysis of financial results, specialised target reports, cost saving strategies and liaisons with external advisors from auditors to accountants.

In addition, FinanceHeads offers a unique tailor-made system, allowing SMEs to purchase only required service while cutting the cost of full-time directors.

Founding director Caroline Billington said that it was already proving a success: "We offer quality assured support to financial directors and aim to look forward with businesses giving them control of their own numbers.

"We have already reached our target, and hope to expand geographically and double membership, with such a small number of members we can assure the highest quality of knowledge and support."

The organisation is currently supported by nine strong members, including fellow directors Stephen Foale and Gordon Welsh.
